Support at Home

The most common question that teachers are asked is “how can I help my child at home?” The simple answer is talk to them and read to and with them, because language and vocabulary are the most important things to broaden and develop the mind and brain. Reading, writing and talking (social interaction) are the skills that we will always need in life, whether it be to read instructions or documents, write on a keyboard or communicate with other human beings to function. Finding the square root of 64 is not always the most essential quest in life, but asking the question; “how do you find the square root of 64 is!” There are hundreds of support materials designed to provide extra learning for your child outside of school hours on websites and in workbooks, but these only support if there is an element of teaching and social interaction between parent and child. Discussing how the answer was achieved is often more informative than getting the correct answer itself. The National Academy is a great website for materials to support children because it has online lessons and schemes of work. ## A Warm Welcome

It can be quite daunting when children change schools.

Coming to a new environment, meeting new people and learning new ways of working is hard enough at the best of times, but for a young person it is very scary. This is why I have been so moved and proud of the children in Birch class over recent weeks who have gone above and beyond in ensuring that new children feel welcome.

They have prepared cards and messages of kindness so that their new friends feel a little less overwhelmed. I am also aware that all classes go above and beyond when new friends arrive and I am so grateful to all of our wonderful Belvoirdale children for showing such kindness. These are the fundamental human skills that we call the Belvoirdale Characteristics and that help to make our community a world a better place, despite what others may say or do.

Female Genius

A statue of Leicestershire 19th Century mathematician Ada Lovelace, has been installed in her home town of Hinckley. Lovelace, is described as the world's first computer programmer because of her work with inventor Charles Babbage on his idea for an "analytical engine" in the 1800s. The 2.5m bronze sculpture was unveiled in January outside the Hinckley campus of the North Warwickshire and South Leicestershire College. If only should could see us all carolling on our phones to find out more about the inspiring female scientist!

World famous and Coalville based Toy Company, Palitoy invented Action Man 60 years ago in February 2026.
